Warns Zionists Not To Antagonize

Regardless of the sympathy that the American people may feel for Jews in Europe, the diplomatic policies of the United States "must hang together in some coherent pattern that makes sense from the standpoint of the national interest of America as a whole, including the interest of Americans of Jewish faith," Dr. Harry D. Gideonse, president of Brooklyn College, told the New York chapter of the American Council for Judaism, Inc.

Dr. Gideonse said the basis of the strategy of the U.S. had been to fight wars overseas. He added that "the basis of our diplomacy must therefore always be to insure that there will be secure positions abroad from which we can fight to avoid having the war brought right into the home country."

The speaker declared that the diplomatic policies of the country regarding the state of Israel could not be settled in terms of that nation alone but in the light of "groupings" of major powers around the United States and the Soviet Union.

Dr. Gideonse commented that just as there was an Arab minority in Israel, there was a Jewish minority in Palestine as a whole. He held that diplomatic policies abroad and domestic policies that reflect the former could not afford tendencies that contradicted declared policies for the Philippine Islands, India or Ceylon.

Urging the audience to take the world as it was, the educator said the shortage of oil in World War II had led to a foreign policy of protecting a source of oil in the Middle East. He cautioned against disposing of the oil crisis by coining phrases against "oil imperialism."

The policies of the U.S. hardly would be changed if the Federal

Has Led In One Pulpit For Thirty Years

Three thousand persons paid tribute to Dr. Israel Goldstein in a special service honoring his thirtieth anniversary as rabbi of Congregation Bnai Jeshurun, in New York.

The occasion marked a triple celebration. It also commemorated the thirtieth anniversary since the Synagogue Bnai Jeshurun was built at 257 West Eighty-eighth Street; and Dr. Goldstein's forthcoming departure in mid-November on sabbatical leave of absence to Israel, where he plans to spend a year in Jerusalem as treasurer of the Jewish Agency for Palestine.

The synagogue was filled to its capacity of 1,286 persons. An overflow of nearly 600 persons heard the services by loudspeaker from the auditorium in the congregation community house at 270 West Eighty-ninth Street.

Afterward, hundreds more arrived. After the services, the ballroom was a festive scene as congregation members and friends gathered to share with Dr. Goldstein a kiddush ceremony of wine and cake.

Sunlight poured through the blue-stained glass windows as leaders in American Jewry and Zionism extolled Dr. Goldstein, congratulatory messages were read and Dr. Goldstein preached his anniversary sermon. Isidor S. Schweitzer, who heads the board of trustees, read tributes that ranged from messages sent by President Truman and Governor Dewey to those from displaced persons in Germany and Austria.

Dr. Goldstein, who said in his message that he had "tried to make my ministry a cement between Jew and Christian, Palestine and America," received tributes from repre-

Charging that funds raised in the United States were being used "as a lever with which to change or dominate the social structure of Palestine," Henry Montor, executive vice-chairman of the United Palestine Appeal, has resigned his post. He has been associated with the Appeal and its affiliates for twenty-two years.

Mr. Montor, who also holds the post of executive vice-chairman of the United Jewish Appeal, the agency now cumpaigning for $250,000,000 on behalf of the United Palestine Appeal, the Joint Distribution Committee and United Service for New Americans, has not submitted his resignation to the Jewish Appeal, but will continue his services there until the end of the year.

His resignation to the United Palestine Appeal was submitted September 10 and was accepted by the executive committee on October 21.

Mr. Montor not only was dissatisfied with the manner in which funds obtained in America were being spent in Palestine, but also urged that the United Palestine Appeal be broadened in its governing bodies so that the Jewish communities of America and contributors at large would share in the responsibility for the disbursement of funds, according to the New York Times.

At present the United Palestine Appeal, which was established by the Palestine Foundation Fund and the Jewish National Fund, and receives the major part of the funds collected by the UJA, is effectively under the control of the Zionist Organization of America, according to Mr. Montor. This was denied by ZOA spokesmen, who asserted that all Zionist organizations in the United States had a [illegible] Palestine Appeal.

Differences between Mr. Montor and the Zionist leadership in New York came to a head last year when he charged at the ZOA annual convention that moral support was being given to the terrorist organizations in Palestine. He is also said to have taken a leading part in the recent formation of the Committee for Progressive Zionism, which has challenged many of the policies of the Zionist Organization of America.

As executive vice-chairman of the United Jewish Appeal, of which former Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau Jr., is general chairman, Mr. Montor has been one of the two heads of the national organization, which in the last three years alone has been responsible for raising $370,000,000 for aid to Israel, and to refugees in Europe and the United States.

In his letter of resignation to Dr. Israel Goldstein, chairman of the United Palestine Appeal and a former president of the Zionist Organization of America, Mr. Montor wrote:

"The growth of the State of Israel is vital for the survival of Jews and the Jewish people. Huge funds will be needed. The Jews of America should help to provide those funds. I am convinced, however, that the Jews of America do not want their funds to be used as a lever with which to change or dominate the social structure of Palestine.

"In their sincere desire to provide the maximum support for Israel and for the fulfilment of the opportunities it presents for the rehabilitation of persecuted and homeless Jews, the Jewish communities of the United States want the totality of their funds to flow freely to their destination, and want a direct relationship with the use of these funds.

"It is imperative, in the interests of Israel, that every encouragement be given to the Jews of the United States to contribute in fullest measure for the immigration and colonization program that must now be speeded. It should be an instrumentality governed by those who create the resources; it should provide a unified channel for aid to Israel; the community in Israel should share in the determination of the most effective use of the funds; it should, above all, invoke the leadership of those who give services. Through such an organization, Israel and the beneficiaries of the funds will be protected from political intrigue and partisan ambition.

"I want to be fully free to say these things. That is why I resign."

In his reply, Dr. Goldstein wrote: "It takes more than an ordinate amount of self-confidence to set

MAGNES, HEBREW UNIVERSITY HEAD, WAS GREAT LIBERAL, BELIEVED IN BI-NATIONAL STATE

Dr. Judah L. Magnes, president of the Hebrew University, in Jerusalem, who was one of the modern builders of the liberal tradition in America and for forty years an outstanding cultural leader in American and world Jewry, died in New York, at the age of 71, of a heart condition, in his suite at the Hotel Mayflower, Central Park West and Sixty-first Street. With him when he died was his wife, the former Beatrice Loewenstein, and the hotel physician.

Dr. and Mrs. Magnes returned to the United States late in April, their first return since 1946. He came on behalf of the Ihud (Union) Association of Palestine to present to the United Nations Special Assembly his views on a binational Jewish and Arab state for Palestine, of which he had been an advocate for twenty-five years, and to support the American proposal of that time for a trusteeship in Palestine.

He and his wife were to have returned to Palestine in June. He had been suffering from a heart condition for the last two years, and just before his return he was taken ill. For a time his condition improved, but he knew that his career was at an end.

Two sons were with him during his last two days. They are Benedict and Dr. Jonathan Magnes. A third son, David, is in Palestine. Dr. Magnes is also survived by two sisters, Mrs. Chester J. Teller, of Newton, Pa., and Mrs. Eugene Blumenthal, of New Rochelle, N.Y. A third sister, Mrs. Tess Magnes Popper, wife of Prof. William Popper of the University of California, who is now in New York, died several years ago.

A funeral service was held at the Jewish Theological Seminary of America. Dr. David De Sola Pool, [illegible] Spanish and Portuguese Synagogue, and Dr. Louis Finkelstein, president of the seminary, officiated. Burial was private.

Judah Leon Magnes was born in San Francisco on July 5, 1877, the son of David and Sophie Abrahamson Magnes. He received his B.A. degree from the University of Cincinnati in 1898 and his rabbinical degree from the Hebrew Union College two years later.

From 1900 to 1902 he studied in Europe, chiefly at the Universities of Berlin and Heidelberg, receiving a Ph.D. degree at Heidelberg in 1902. While abroad he toured the Jewish towns of Galician and Russian Poland and his experiences made him a confirmed Zionist. It was then that he affiliated himself with the Zionist movement.

Upon returning to the United States in 1903, he served as librarian and instructor at the Hebrew Union College for a year and then entered the active rabbinate. He was called to Brooklyn to occupy the pulpit of Temple Israel in 1904.

As a member of New York's clergy, he took an active role in the liberal causes of his time, one which was to claim an important part of his time until his removal to Jerusalem for the founding of the Hebrew University in 1922. Always a champion of the underprivileged and an advocate of peace through understanding and brotherhood, he associated himself with the leading liberals of the city and the country in what were, at that time, unpopular causes.

While his forthrightness and oratorical abilities quickly brought him moral leadership among American liberals, he became increasingly active also as a leader in the Jewish community. He was one of the first to take part in the revival of Jewish cultural life among American Jews. He was one of the founders of the American Jewish Committee in 1906 and he served as secretary from 1905 to 1908 of the Federation of American Zionists, now the Zionist Organization of America.

In the Zionist movement he helped to bridge the chasm between the Americans of the Jewish faith of whom he was spokesman and symbol, and fellow-Zionists in or recently from Eastern Europe, separated from them in language and ideology. He was among the first to insist that in America Zionism must be interpre[illegible] in the light of the tradition [illegible]erican democracy rather th[illegible]ing to theories sprung fro[illegible]stern European environme[illegible]a.

Identifying himself with the needs and aspirations of the Jewish masses abroad as he had done with the masses, regardless of faith, at home, he organized the protest meetings over the Kish[illegible] pogroms in Russ[illegible] and 1907. He led a parade up Broadway and Fifth Avenue as a demonstration of sorrow and indignation, and addressed many mass meetings. He made relief appeals for the victims and raised funds to provide the Russian-Jewish self-defense organization with arms and ammunition.

The late Louis Marshall, an officer of Temple Emanu-El, heard Dr. Magnes speak at a mass meeting. Negotiations followed which resulted in Dr. Magnes' engagement as associate rabbi of Temple Emanu-El in 1906.

During his incumbency he laid the groundwork for the organization of the Jewish Community of New York, and served as its chairman during the organization's existence from 1907 to 1922. While the organization was short-lived, its Bureau of Jewish Education, which he established in 1910, functioned until 1941 and influenced organizations for Jewish education throughout the country.

His advocacy of more traditional aspects of worship and custom than the Reform Jewish congregation could accept led to his resignation in 1910. He served for two years as rabbi of Congregation Bnai Jeshurun, but there also he was unable to persuade the congregation to accept his own preference for more orthodox Judaism.

In 1912 he left the rabbinate and became leader of the Society for the Advancement of Judaism, which he served until 1920. The post enabled him to devote himself more fully to the social, philanthropic and cultural activities in which he was interested. He associated with labor and socialist leaders in seeking to improve conditions in New York's East Side, aided the gar-

Am I too old to buy life insurance?

The middle-aged man who asked this question feared that at his age the cost of life insurance would be prohibitive . . . but even were he much older, Mutual low-cost life insurance would still prove good business.

Unfortunately many people realize the importance of life insurance only when through age or other disability they are no longer able to secure it. A life insurance programme should be started as early in life as possible.

CHRISTIANS TO GET H.U.C. FELLOWSHIPS

Three fellowships will be available at Hebrew Union College for graduate Christian ministers who have displayed promise in the field of Hebrew scholarship, as the result of a grant made by the American Jewish Committee. These scholarships will be known as the AJC Interfaith Fellowships.

The fellowships are designed for ministers who plan to teach in Christian theological seminaries, affording them a scientific background of Judaism and its history, theology and ethics, with particular emphasis on relations between Christianity and Judaism. These subjects are treated not only in the classroom but also in personal conversations and discussion, providing the prospective seminary teachers with a broader and more sympathetic understanding of Judaism and of the Jews.

Heifetz Of Symphony And Of Swing

By Howard Taubman, In The New York Times Magazine

Jascha Heifetz is one of the world's foremost violinists and a matchless interpreter of Bach, Beethoven and Brahms, but to the juke-box set he's the composer of a hit tune called "When You Make Love to Me—Don't Make Believe". It's the first swing number he wrote, but not the last. What is more, it's a hit. The tune has climbed into the upper crust among current favorites. It has been recorded by a number of bands and vocalists, and Bing Crosby has done it on records with 300,000 discs in the first release.

What impelled a musician of Heifetz's stature to write swing—a composer whose previous writing had been confined to about 100 transcriptions for violin of other composers' music?

"I wrote it to prove a theory," he explains. "We were sitting around the dinner table in California a good many months ago, talking about the young American public that listens to jazz. I said that these boys and girls don't give a hoot for names of composers. They like what they like without being overawed by tags. Some of my friends disagreed and challenged me to prove it. Well, there was one way to prove it."

He asked an experienced lyricist, Marjorie Goetschius, to write some words, and he composed the tune, releasing it under the pseudonym Jim Hoyl. When the song had caught on as the work of the unknown Jim Hoyl, Mr. Heifetz was willing to confess his part in its authorship. Among his new swing numbers is "Hora Swingeato", a title that pays its respects to one of his most dazzling concert numbers, "Hora Staccato."

If the violinist's "long-hair" friends are disturbed by his trafficking with a vulgar art, he doesn't care. He is not an intellectual snob who insists that the test of a thing is whether it's good in its own class.

"I have never hesitated to play Stephen Foster's 'Jeanie With the Light Brown Hair'," he says. "It's a fine song. American to the core. Why should I go hunting for its Viennese or Parisian equivalent and try to palm that off as art because it has a foreign name? Foster's tune is art in its class. So are songs of Kern, Gershwin and Berlin. I think Irving Berlin's 'White Christmas' is a grand tune, and it pleases me to play it in concert or on the radio."

He talks with the ring of conviction. Then his eyes light up and he smiles infectiously. To those who judge Jascha Heifetz by the face he presents from the concert stage, that smile would be a revelation. For the Heifetz of the concert stage is serious, unsmiling, impassive; it is almost as if he were wearing a mask. He has been accused repeatedly of being indifferent to music and public. But to anyone with ears, that charge is rubbish.

If Heifetz's platform manner is cool and correct, even patrician, it is because he has deliberately sought to make it that way. He has studiously avoided the obvious tricks of the trade—the agonized and ecstatic facial expressions, the violent weaving and bending of the body, the impassioned footwork employed by some virtuosos to keep their audiences constantly reminded that they are "suffering." He knows that his art is auditory, not visual. Of course, he values the sentiment, inexpressible in words, that the great composers have poured into their music, and it is all there in his playing.

For Jascha Heifetz is one of the greatest violinists to come along in our time. You may read of the diabolical wizardry of Paganini in the nineteenth century, but a Heifetz can play anything a Paganini could, and probably some things more difficult; the principal difference, I would guess, is that Heifetz does it so unostentatiously that it looks easy.

What makes a great violinist? First of all, he must have absolute command of the instrument. With the fingers of his left hand he must be able to move over the fingerboard with lightning-like rapidity and he must be accurate. With the right hand he must wield the bow with a large and subtle variety of pressures, for the tone he draws from the instrument depends on the perfect control of the bow. The violin is not like a piano whose tone is fixed and kept in tune by the tuner. The quality of tone extracted from a fiddle is in direct proportion to the skill of the violinist.

But command of the instrument is only the beginning of the battle. The next, and more important, task is to turn that skill to artistic purpose. To do that the violinist must be a superb musician. He must penetrate deeply to the core of a composition. He must understand composer, composition and the period from which they stem. He must have the sensitivity, the spirit, the poetry and the largeness of vision to meet the composer all the way and then to turn around and do as much with a large audience.

Jascha Heifetz fills the bill on all counts. His technical command of the violin is unsurpassed. When Arturo Toscanini first heard the violinist, he said he couldn't believe his ears. Heifetz was playing octaves so brilliantly that Toscanini couldn't figure out how he managed them. "I nearly lost my mind," the great Italian maestro told a friend.

Mr. Heifetz is impressed by the progress good music has made in this country in the past twenty-five years. The public has grown enormously, not only in size but in discrimination.

"I have noticed in recent years a larger proportion of young people in my audiences," he says. "When I played for service men here and overseas during the war, I found that they liked the serious as well as the brilliant pieces. Years ago the attention of audiences seemed to perk up when I got around to the short, brilliant pieces at the end of a concert. Now I feel that the attention is just as keen when the big, serious works are being played."

Mr. Heifetz has been playing the violin since he was 3. His father, Ruvin, began teaching him the instrument in the lad's native Vilna, then in Czarist Russia. At 7, the boy made his first public appearance and he has been earning money as a fiddler since.

At 8 Jascha was graduated from the Conservatory of Vilna, and the next year the family sold everything and moved to St. Petersburg (now Leningrad) so that the boy might study with Leopold Auer, most notable violin teacher of his time. At the St. Petersburg Conservatory Jascha also learned to play the piano, harp, viola and almost every instrument of the orchestra.

With his parents and two sisters, he left a Russia in the turmoil of 1917. The family crossed Siberia, part of China, Japan and Hawaii, Jascha giving concerts en route to earn passage for the group. On Oct. 17, 1917, the slim, shy boy, then 16, stood for the first time on the stage of Carnegie Hall and began his conquest of the country he was to embrace as home.

It was that recital that gave rise to one of the most famous of musical stories. Everybody in music turned out for that performance because word of Heifetz's attainments had travelled ahead of him. Mischa Elman, sharing a box with the great and witty pianist, Leopold Godowsky, wiped his brow and observed, "It's rather warm in here." Godowsky replied, "Not for pianists."

Heifetz has known nearly every musical triumph. He has played almost everywhere. He has won

SEES NEED OF CHAPLAINS OVERSEAS

Dr. David de Sola Pool, head of the Spanish and Portuguese Synagogue in New York, completed an intensive tour of Army installations in Germany and Austria, and came back with a report which strongly emphasizes the need for Jewish chaplains in that area and pointed up the obvious anti-Semitism of the German population.

Dr. Pool, whose trip was authorized by the Army program of having a representative of each major religion visit former war areas at regular intervals, stated strongly that [illegible] in the U. S.—are it."

Army was practically non-existent.

He pointed out that not a single case of anti-Semitism in the Army was reported to him during his tour. Dr. Pool also made some investigation of DP centers. He stressed that "Jewish chaplains are virtually circuit riders," and explained that this serious shortage is caused by the large areas which the chaplains are required to cover.

A note of realism was struck in Dr. Pool's report as he stated that the civilian population of Germany "has no sense of guilt." He said anti-Semitism among the German civilians has become "a folk movement," adding: "They have currently sunk so low that they must have a scapegoat, and the Jews

U.S. Army Needs More Chaplains

The vital need for the immediate composition of special prayers and devotional literature to be used in the treatment of the mentally ill, "with specific reference to Jewish patients in VA hospitals," was reported in New York at a meeting of the National Jewish Welfare Board's Division of Religious Activities. The report was based on a study by Rabbi Roland B. Gittelsohn, of the Central Synagogue of Nassau County, Rockville Centre, L.I., made at Winter General Hospital and Menninger Foundation, in Topeka, Kansas. It recommended the setting up of a committee by the Division to write appropriate prayers.

The report of Rabbi Gittelsohn, who served in the U.S. Navy as Jewish chaplain at Iwo Jima, will be implemented by the JWB following a similar study to be made of the needs of paraplegics, TB patients and surgical cases by Rabbi Israel Gerber of Fitchburg, Mass.

The meeting also was told of the needs of the army and air forces for more Jewish chaplains and of their request to the Division to launch a recruitment campaign for 15 more chaplains in the next few months. It is anticipated that the army will eventually require 60 additional full-time Jewish chaplains. The Division also announced that the National Guard, which recently has been brought to full strength following passage of Selective Service, has asked it to grant ecclesiastical endorsement to Jewish chaplains in the Guard. This endorsement has already been given by the Division to chaplains now serving in the National Guard units of Alabama, New Jersey and New York.

The Division of Religious Activities, which recruits, endorses and serves Jewish chaplains in the armed forces, is serving at some 400 military installations and V.A. hospitals at home and abroad with a staff of 24 full-time and 158 part-time Jewish chaplains.

Mrs. Roosevelt Speaks At ORT Paris School

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt took time from a crowded United Nations schedule in Paris to visit the Paris school of the Organization for Rehabilitation Through Training, where Jewish youths receive vocational training, and to address the students.

"These young people," she said, "can go everywhere — France, America, Israel. In every country of the world they will always be useful citizens. They will perform necessary work not only for themselves but for the benefit of the country in which they will settle.

"If you remain here you will participate in the reconstruction of things which have to be renewed because they were destroyed during the difficult years which you have just been through. If you go abroad you will always be useful to the country in which you decide to remain, thanks to the work which you learn here."

Mrs. Roosevelt was introduced by David Lvovitch, of New York, president of the executive committee of the World ORT Union. The school, which is at Montreuil, on the eastern edge of Paris, was founded through a gift from the International Ladies Garment Workers Union. In concluding her speech, Mrs. Roosevelt said:

"You know that one of our citizens, who came to America from Europe many years ago, Mr. David Dubinsky, president of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, was very interested in this school, which is a gift of the ILGWU, just as he is interested in many things in America. I shall be glad on my return to America to be able to tell him that I saw many young girls and youths in France who were learning to work and to become good citizens in any country of the world. I wish you the best possible future."

The new building, dedicated last July by Mr. Dubinsky, includes a gymnasium, recreation rooms and a canteen where students can get adequate balanced meals for 34 cents each. The American Joint Distribution Committee cooperates with the World ORT in supporting the school, which has trained more than 27,000 persons during its history.

Seek To Stop Religious Plan

The American Jewish Committee is participating in the preparation of a case in the New York State Supreme Court to halt the released time plan of religious instruction of New York public school children during school hours.

The suit seeks to enjoin the State and New York City school authorities from supporting religious education by releasing pupils for attendance at religious instruction classes outside of school buildings and from otherwise assisting the released-time program. The action is based upon the recent US Supreme Court decision in the Vashti McCollum case which reinforced the principle of separation of church and state by ruling that religious instruction on public school premises or with the aid of school authorities violates the Constitution.

Two heads of families respectively affiliated with a church and synagogue have petitioned the Supreme Court in Brooklyn to order the New York City Board of Education to stop the released-time program. They are Tessim Zorach and Mrs. Esta Gluck. Their action is supported by nine civic groups, including AJC.

In the McCollum case, the US Supreme Court decided that public school systems may not be used to help any religious groups spread its faith. That case involved religious classes conducted inside school buildings, but the high court failed to clarify the specific question of the released-time program under which children are excused from school to attend religious classes off the school grounds.

Happy Ending Follows Sad Arrival

Manfred and Marion Wolff have found a home. The 11-year-old boy and his 8-year-old sister arrived in New York from Brussels, Belgium, only to learn that their foster-mother had died and her husband could not go through with the adoption.

A spokesman for the United Service for New Americans said that the youngsters left New York by plane for a city he could not name. There a child-care agency placed the young travellers with a "fine family." He added that a number of persons had called his agency offering to adopt Manfred and Marion.

The children had been living with Mr. and Mrs. [illegible] Scharf in Brussels, Belgium. The children's parents were [illegible] in a concentration camp and [illegible] the youngsters from a similar fate.

When a Sabena plane rolled to a stop at the New York International Airport at Idlewild, Queens, Harvey Goodman of the United Service for New Americans was waiting nervously to tell the children the sad news of the death of the foster-mother-to-be. A few moments before, Mr. Goodman had said, "I don't know how I'll be able to tell them."

Manfred, a curly-haired youngster, wearing a brown jacket and short pants, stepped off, followed by his blonde, curly-haired sister, who wore a plaid dress and was hugging a big doll.

Swallowing hard, Mr. Goodman approached them and told them of the change in plans. He said their "new" mother, Mrs. Irving Rothschild, of 177 Whittier Street, Springfield, Mass., had died and that Mr. Rothschild had decided he could not go through with the adoption.

The children replied in French that they had been sorry to leave the family that had reared them in Brussels and that they had been "looking forward to living here."

The children were housed with a French-speaking Brooklyn family for a few days and then sent to the European-Jewish Children's Aid, Inc., 15 Park Row, where a successful attempt was made to place them in a foster home.

An official of the United Service for New Americans explained later that Mrs. Rothschild's death followed the completion of travel arrangements for the children, and that the plans had progressed so far they could not be altered.

It was [illegible] also that the children had never met the Rothschilds, the planned adoption having been arranged privately after the Springfield family heard about the children through friends.

Reports Italian Jews In Need

"Thousands of uprooted Jews in Italy must not be forgotten," declared Leon D. Fisher, HIAS (Hebrew Immigrant Aid Society) Director for Italy, who arrived in the United States after an absence of 18 months. The liquidation of the DP Camps in Italy, in which there are at present approximately 23,000 Jews, is proceeding rapidly, with the occupants of the camps going to Palestine and other countries, noted Mr. Fisher, but there are thousands of Jews who live outside of the camps in Italy, and they are urgently in need of assistance to realize their dreams of immigrating to the United States and elsewhere.

"The Italian Government has been very sympathetic to the Jews," said Mr. Fisher, "and has created no difficulties affecting their temporary residence in Italy, but the cold fact is that economic conditions in the country at the present time, are such that the position of the uprooted Jew who lives privately outside the DP Camps is an unfortunate one. These displaced Jews look to HIAS for assistance."

Mr. Fisher stated that HIAS, with area offices in Rome, Milan, Naples, Genoa and Bari, and with representatives in all the other principal cities, has had an exceptionally effective year in assisting in the emigration of the Jews from Italy. During the past year HIAS sponsored the immigration of almost three thousand of them to overseas countries, particularly to the United States, Canada, Australia and South America.

Mr. Fisher pointed out that Italy, because of its geographic position, is an important transient point of immigration, and transmigrants from all over Europe are assisted by HIAS in Italy. In the year just past, HIAS sponsored and facilitated the passage of transmigrants in Italy from 22 European countries.

Lift N.Y. Ban On Book

New York public schools have lifted a ban on "Gentleman's Agreement," the novel about anti-Semitism by Laura Z. Hobson, which had been excluded on the ground that it contains passages making light of extra-marital relations.

The Board of Superintendents, nine top officials, decided to approve the book for the official high school library reading list. That means the novel may be purchased for the students' shelves throughout the city.

This is the first time a book, once challenged, has been restored, officials said. The professional board acted on a divided vote after Maximilian A. Moss, Brooklyn member of the Board of Education which is composed of citizens who make public policy, attended their meeting and made a plea for approval. In support of "Gentleman's Agreement," Mr. Moss reportedly offered a collection of excerpts from other books already approved.

The superintendents made known their action to the Board of Education during a closed session. The superintendents took the position that they had reservations about authorizing the book's circulation because it has passages which some persons might consider unsuited for high-school reading. However, it was indicated, the board found, on reconsidering all aspects of the question, that the questioned passages were overshadowed by the book's effective presentation of the theme of opposition to anti-Semitism.

HEINZ Vegetarian BEANS...
BEST SELLER IN EVERY JEWISH NEIGHBORHOOD!

To exalt lowly beans to the status of best seller, the Heinz rule is—bake 'em and drench 'em! The baking is done in hot, dry ovens till the skins are brown and crisp. Then comes the drenching! The thirsty beans fairly drink up their rich, tempting tomato sauce. The result is a dish, which heralds good eating by its very aroma. Heinz pareve Vegetarian Beans are a boon to the busy housewife and the hungry family.

success as a concert artist, as a radio performer, as a recording artist and even as a movie star. Yet he does not love every aspect of his trade. For him two necessary evils are touring and practicing. It amuses him when people are surprised that he, master of violin perfection, still needs to practice after forty years of work.

"I agree with Liszt," he says. "If I don't practice one day, I know it; two days, the critics know it; three days, the public knows it."

Mr. Heifetz who was naturalized in 1925, makes his home in California but, thanks to his travels across the continent, knows the country better than most Americans. He has become so thoroughly American in spirit that you would think he was born and raised here. He knows our sports, attends all kinds of games. He sits through football games in raw weather, and the only concession he makes to his hands is to wear a glove on the left, the fingerboard, hand. But even when he speaks of sport, he returns to music. It reminds him of people, he says, who don't like music because they don't understand it.

"They wouldn't think of going to a ball game without knowing its aims and rules," he observes. "The same modest effort would lead to an enhancement of musical enjoyment."

CLASS IN COOKERY

APPLE FRITTERS

Pare apples, core and cut across in rings. Roll in powdered sugar and dip in fritter batter. Before sugar has time to dissolve, fry in deep shortening, like doughnuts. Roll in powdered sugar just before serving. Serve hot.

Fritter Batter:

a speck of salt
one-half cup cold water
one cup flour
two tablespoons melted butter
one teaspoon sugar

Stir salt in egg yolk, add butter slowly, then sugar, and when well mixed stir in the flour slowly. Then add the water a little at a time. Beat well, set aside in a cold place for two hours, then fold in the beaten whites of eggs. The batter must be thick. If not soft enough add white of another egg.

Mrs. B. Goldstein,
14 Raglan Avenue, Toronto.

CHOCOLATE CAKE

two cups flour
one teaspoon vanilla
two eggs
two tablespoons butter
two heaping tablespoons cocoa one level teaspoon baking powder
one level teaspoon baking soda one and one-quarter cups sugar
one cup milk

Cream butter, add sugar, and cream together. Add unbeaten eggs, and mix well. Then add flour, baking powder, baking soda and cocoa, which have been sifted together, alternately with the milk; beat well, and lastly, add vanilla. Pour into two greased layer-cake tins, and bake for about one-half hour in a 375-degree oven.

Coffee Frosting

Cream two cups icing sugar into two tablespoons butter, and add one-quarter cup hot coffee. Spread over layers when cake has cooled.

Even the most meticulous person perspires constantly both summer and winter. It is one of the body's methods of eliminating waste. To avoid offending, keep the skin healthy, the pores open and the body scrupulously clean. Frequent changes of linen and underclothing are essential.

FOUR-FRONT FIGHT

Character education is an important factor in the never-ending fight against venereal disease. All thoughtful Canadians should get behind the efforts of those agencies that work for the eradication of this nuisance. V.D. should be fought on all four fronts—health, welfare, legal and moral. The help of everyone is needed to stamp out V.D.

THE BEST IS FREE

Not so many years ago more than half the children who suffered from diphtheria died in spite of treatment. The death rate often reached as high as 80%. Whooping cough has been a deadly foe of the baby for years. These dangers have been largely overcome by immunization, the best preventive treatment for these contagious diseases yet discovered. Immunization is free.

At a joint meeting of the Toronto Rabbis and the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen of North America, Local 633, Kosher division, held at Toronto Labour Lyceum, on Monday evening, November 1, 1948, the following was reported. "That all the Toronto Jewish Butcher stores co-operated fully and were closed on Saturday, October 30, 1948".

We hope that this is the beginning of a new epoch in the observance of the Sabbath day by the Jewish butcher stores of Toronto. We trust that this co-operation will continue in the future and we therefore appeal to all Jewish housewives of Toronto to purchase their meat supplies for the entire week-end on Thursday or Friday.

EVERYBODY'S BUSINESS

by

Don Graham

Have you made any new friends lately?

Of course we always want to keep our tried-and-true friends. But to make new ones is to discover an important secret of a richer, more interesting life. Like travel, new faces and new personalities help lift us out of our ruts.

So, instead of waiting for new friends to drift into our lives, it is a good plan to seek them and cultivate them.

Where will you find them? Right in your own town—perhaps in your neighborhood, church, club or place of work. Already you have a "nodding acquaintance" with some people who may later be included in your circle of intimate companions.

Choose from all types—not just those whose occupations and interests are similar to yours. Favour those who are mentally stimulating.

Of course, to make new friends means that you must usually make the first move. But most people appreciate being singled out and quickly respond to friendly overtures. And the little effort you make will pay dividends in happier, more successful living.

Like a good friend, the modern life insurance agent is always ready to offer helpful advice when needed. And as a result of his services, millions of Canadians enjoy peace of mind through owning life insurance.

Ben Arcadi, program consultant of the United Synagogue of America, will speak in Toronto at the annual donor's luncheon of Goel Tzedec Synagogue Sisterhood on Tuesday, November 9. Mr. Arcadi is an author and lecturer, and founder and director of the Dramatic School of the Chicago College of Jewish Studies. On Wednesday evening, November 10, he will address a dinner meeting of the Men's Club of Goel Tzedec. Mrs. Joseph Wagman and Mrs. Manning Stone are co-conveners of the donor's luncheon. Dr. Alexander Lipson is program chairman of the Goel Tzedec Men's Club.

oneself up as better qualified than the entire Zionist movement to judge what is in the best interest of Israel and of the Jews who need Israel."

He added:

"The statements in Mr. Montor's letter of resignation were condemned as baseless slurs by all the groups which constitute the United Palestine Appeal, including the Jewish National Fund, the Palestine Foundation Fund, the Zionist Organization of America, Hadassah, Poale Zion and Mizrachi.

"The United Palestine Appeal has the support of the Jewish Agency for Palestine, the highest authority in the conduct of its affairs."

He said also that it was a misrepresentation of facts to assert that the ZOA controlled and affected the social-economic pattern of Israel.

Dr. Chaim Weizmann, president of Israel, sent a telegram to Mr. Monter saying: "Regret hearing your resignation. Feel confident Israel will continue to have benefit of your loyal, devoted, brilliant service. Warm regards."

It is assumed the entire problem will be discussed at the national conference that the United Palestine Appeal has called in Chicago.

WARNS ZIONISTS

Government instead of private interests controlled "our oil properties in the Middle East," Dr. Gideonse declared. Continuing, he said:

"If some of our military and diplomatic officials are more interested in the Near and Middle Eastern oil than they are in the fate of the new state of Israel, we should remember that they are paid a salary by the American Government to protect the national interest in the largest sense of the term.

"Zionist groups can count on a great deal of sympathy in the United States, but when they try to force American statesmen and diplomats into verbal commitments which, if they should have to be backed by action, might lead to a hazarding of significant national interests, they are courting either confusing and disappointing reversals of policy or ultimately a turn of American public opinion against their cause as a whole."

Dr. Gideonse deplored "fanatics," saying that "any fool with a gun can kill an unarmed man, but he cannot prove in that way that his ideas of justice or decency are superior to those of the man who was murdered." He condemned the murder of Count Folke Bernadotte as "a high price to pay for the discovery that extremists are a menace to the reputation of the Jewish cause as a whole."

The speaker linked the murder with a campaign to boycott British exports to America. He called the boycott "fundamentally subversive of American interests and of American foreign policy."

The boycott was likened by Dr. Gideonse to Soviet attacks on the Marshall Plan and "the Communist-led strike in the French coal mines." He declared that "the net effect of these acts will be to increase the demand upon American taxpayers for additional dollar deficits caused by such irresponsible political and economic illiteracy," reports the New York Times.

The college head said he approved of the Council as a "conservative reminder of the existence of a large and influential group of American citizens of Jewish faith who are not likely to forget that it is a major interest of the Jewish cause itself to keep our program in Palestine well within the framework of American national interests as a whole."

Viewing the foreign policy of the U.S. as critical, Dr. Gideonse said the nation was playing a political game "for keeps," with the national temper likely to show little patience with "any extremist group that cannot restrain its ambitions and designs within the framework of the country as a whole."

The meeting was presided over by Henry A. Loeb, chairman of the chapter. The Council announced that it "rejects any concept that Jews are at home only in Palestine," and denied that any individual or group "can speak for or represent all the Jews of America."

sentatives of many peoples. Among those sending felicitations were Harold E. Stassen, president of the University of Pennsylvania; Dr. Everett Clinchy, who heads the National Conference of Christians and Jews; the Right Rev. Charles K. Gilbert, Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of New York; Dr. A. L. Sachar, president of Brandeis University, which Dr. Goldstein founded two years ago in Waltham, Mass., and officials of the Israeli Government and Zionist leaders.

Personal commendations also were made by Jewish leaders. Dr. Louis Finkelstein, president of the Jewish Theological Seminary, praised the rabbi for having "mastered the art of administration, the understanding of Jews and a knowledge of practical affairs." He visualized Dr. Goldstein as serving to interpret "republican Israel" to this country and the United States to Israel at a time when "interpretation is of particular significance to the whole of America and the world."

Eliahu Epstein, Israeli envoy to the United States, spoke of Dr. Goldstein's forthcoming role in Israel as his greatest.

"We cannot leave Jerusalem as an island surrounded by a sea of Arabs," he said.

Dr. Goldstein said he found more "unity in American Jewish life today than thirty years ago," with all American Jews "eager to help set Israel on its feet." He pleaded that American democracy remain "uncontaminated by germs of racial and religious bigotry."

New War In Palestine

The New York Herald Tribune says:

Heavy censorship makes it difficult to judge the precise causes, the objectives or the extent of the new warfare which has broken out in tragic Palestine. The Israeli forces appear to have launched a major effort to relieve the Jewish settlements in the northern Negeb—an effort which, if successful, must render the Egyptian positions there untenable and so forcibly regain for Israel at least a part of the territory allotted to the Jewish state by the original General Assembly resolution.

Whether the truce—or what remains of it—can survive this action is not yet clear. The Arab nations have their own deep differences and jealousies; and the Trans-Jordan, Syrian and Lebanese troops have not yet moved to extricate the Egyptians from a predicament which they seem to have invited by their own exclusive designs on the Negeb. But whether the fighting spreads more widely or not, what does seem clear is the futility of further truces or cease-fire orders to control, of themselves, a dynamic situation charged with forces which have already gone far beyond restraints of that kind.

Even if it is possible to limit or halt the new fighting without a revival of general war in Palestine, the basis of the Bernadotte plan has already been undermined. The essence of that plan was its acceptance, substantially, of the status quo—including the recognition of Israel, on the one hand, as a nation in fact in existence, no longer subject to question, and a recognition, on the other hand, of the boundaries as they had in general been defined by military action. It was possible to hope that, in the shock occasioned by the mediator's brutal assassination, a firm and prompt commitment by the United Nations to this broad basis for settlement might have brought agreement from both Arabs and Jews.

Unfortunately, the hopes have been dissipated. The United Nations failed to act firmly, promptly or, indeed, at all. Both Arabs and Jews rejected the Bernadotte plan as it stood, while the Arabs gave even less indication than the Israelis that they might accept its underlying idea as a basis for a negotiated peace. The truce simply became a period during which each side was endeavoring to build up its forces against a renewal of war. There is no stability in such a truce, and even if it is temporarily re-established the situation would be bound to break down in bloodshed sooner or later.

The United Nations, without force of its own, cannot impose a solution. Nor is it easy to see how, by producing still another "plan" of some kind not acceptable to both parties, it can put itself in the position of having to condemn whichever side refuses or violates it. The only final and enduring settlement will be the settlement made on the ground by the balance of the actual forces—military, economic and moral—deployed there. It is questionable whether the United Nations either can or should do more than attempt to distinguish and record their verdict. A part of that verdict is already clear. Israel is a state and should be recognized as such. This much is already an irreversible fact of history. Much of the rest is obscure; but it is safe to say that Israel's borders will ultimately be determined by its power to establish and maintain them, and that is something which mere cease-firing orders cannot affect. Perhaps this, also, could be recognized at Paris.

ment unions in seeking to stabilize conditions in their industry and served as impartial chairman of the Fur Workers Reviewing Board in the turbulent fur industry.

Pacifism was one of his strongest convictions throughout his lifetime, one of which he relented only in 1939 to advocate war against Hitler. When the United States declared war in April, 1917, Dr. Magnes joined with other American pacifists in vigorous expressions of pacifism in public. Unlike the situation in the second World War, when the position of religious pacifists was respected, pacifists were reviled then. He refused to compromise, however.

At that time the Jewish Community of New York had become the largest Jewish organization in the world and promised to be a constructive force in American Judaism. As a consequence of Dr. Magnes' pacifism and the public feeling about it, the organization began to decline. The Intercollegiate Menorah Society which he sponsored, and many other Jewish cultural organizations that he founded survived, however.

In the first World War England made Palestine available for Jews as a restored homeland. This afforded Dr. Magnes an opportunity to pioneer in the Holy Land. He settled in Palestine in 1922. A movement developed for the founding of the Hebrew University in Jerusalem, mostly among his friends in America and abroad. Having confidence in his ability, the sponsors entrusted him with the task of organizing the university.

He conceived of the Hebrew University not as a duplicate of western universities but as a bridge upon which East and West might meet. The first university of the Jewish people, it was to be, in his vision, a permanent home for the tradition of science, learning and ethical dedication among the Jews, not to achieve nationalistic aims but to enable Judaism to carry on its historical role as an interpreter and mediator among nations. Hence he stressed the study of Moslem culture along with the cultivation of Hebrew knowledge.

When the university was dedicated in 1925, Dr. Magnes became chancellor. He had been president since 1935. From the beginning of his residence in Palestine he was outspoken for cooperation with the Arab population rather than dependence on British protection. While the official Zionist leadership favored a Jewish commonwealth, he advocated that Palestine be organized as a bi-national state in agreement with the Arabs and that it take its place in an Arab Federation in the Middle East.

During his tenure the university made considerable progress. He was particularly interested in its Institute of Jewish Studies and its School of Oriental Studies, in the Hebrew University Press Association, which he helped establish in 1926, and in the Medical School, the joint creation of the university and of Hadassah, the Women's Zionist Organization of America.

The New York Times said of Dr. Magnes, in an editorial entitled "Magnes Of Mount Scopus":

"Probably from his youngest days in California, and most certainly since his young manhood, Judah L. Magnes, Palestine's greatest educator, held to the creed that if you believed sincerely in an ideal you must live by it, and that there can be no compromise with one's conscience. Time has proved him right more often than wrong in the stands he took. When he challenged the authority of a dean at the University of Cincinnati to censor a student publication he was editing the resulting uproar finally led to the resignation of the president. Years later, in Palestine, he himself raised a great university and might have become a great political figure in the new State of Israel. But he believed in a bi-national Palestine, and refused to compromise on that position. So he was not named to the first Government of Israel.

"Dr. Magnes died in the land of his birth but not of his heart. His heart's home was Palestine. It had been that for twenty-six years, since he went there with his family at the age of forty-five to build a new life, and the great Hebrew University on Mount Scopus, which he had headed as President since 1935. He had been Chancellor for the preceding years, from its dedication in 1925. Into its growth he threw all his tremendous energy. It was largely through his efforts that into it flowed the endowments that have enabled it to become the center of Hebrew culture.

"Like many men of great and complex wisdom, Dr. Magnes had the ability to grasp the enduring and important elements in a situation, the so-called simple things. When people questioned the practicability of a bi-national state, a friend remembered, he was wont to tell the story of his two neighbors. One was a cultured Arab in whose mind he found the highest companionship. "He was godfather to my son," he said. The other was a rather rough fellow with whom Dr. Magnes found little community of thought but with whom, nevertheless, he lived in neighborly amity. "I was godfather to his son," he said. Perhaps time will prove him right on that issue too."
